

Arthur Bates, who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks. Photo: Alison Greenham

Hopping history inspires drinks production project

Beer is among beverages made here in borough

By Sophie Harman

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

Participants on the hop picking trip

Picking hops in Kent

Follow us on Twitter @kntpost

Like us on Facebook facebook.com/turkingandgardenport

Hop picking holidays in Kent the norm for east London families

It's a tradition of a hop picking holiday in Kent for many families, starting in the 1950s and only recently ending. The tradition is now a norm for many families in east London. The tradition started with the hop picking holiday in Kent for many families, starting in the 1950s and only recently ending. The tradition is now a norm for many families in east London.

The hop picking trip in Kent proved popular. Photo: Alison Greenham

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

There's nothing unusual about the beer in a garden, a project led by artist Arthur Bates to get the people of Kent to grow their own beer. Bates is one of the people who's been an ambassador of social enterprise projects encouraging people to drink and sell their own drinks.

Picking hops in Kent